

Fundraising: Then vs now

Private equity fundraising has soared over the last decade and managers are still sitting on record amounts of dry powder, but the pandemic-induced lockdowns over the last 12 months have significantly altered the way funds are raised.

With many restrictions forcing managers to implement new processes and adapt to the remote environment, what impact has the pandemic had on fundraising and what new practices will continue in a post-Covid world?

Simon King, Co-head of Private Equity – Jersey, recently joined a roundtable discussion hosted by Real Deals to discuss the impact of Covid-19 on current fundraising, and the difference between pre- and post- pandemic practices.
